

Internal use only

Abstract number: S4-112

4. High energy cosmic rays (HE-CR I)

Oral preferred

Cosmic rays in astrospheres

Scherer, K.<sup>1</sup>, Ferreira, S.E.S.<sup>2</sup>, van der Schyff, Augusts<sup>2</sup> and Strauss, DuToit<sup>1,2</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Institut f

<sup>2</sup>Centre for Space Research, North-West University, 2520 Potchefstroom, South Africa

We model the cosmic ray flux in a stellar wind cavity of a O or B type star using a transport model based on stochastic differential equations. The required parameters, for example the coefficients of the diffusion tensor, are determined from an underlying magneto-hydrodynamical model. We discuss the transport in different astrospheric models with varying parameters for the transport coefficients. We will argue that large stellar wind cavities can act as sinks for the galactic cosmic ray flux.